Q: vim folds, align column in folds I am having troubles getting vims fold-method "h,v" to align the columns of the columns within a fold-region like shown in C, Java, or Python. What I want is that when I fold, the folded region can be surrounded by comments on the same level, like e.g. in the following image: How can I accomplish this? I am using the standard vim distribution from ubuntu 10.10. I have installed the graphical vim from the repos of ubuntu, is this causing the problems? A: If you're on OS X you can use the following approach: Use HRZZ (start from the top) to open a range of lines Split the window so that you have two windows, one on the top and one on the bottom Paste the lines you want to comment into the bottom window, and comment them out in the top window Unfold the top window and fold the bottom window. You'll end up with this: Let me know if this doesn't work. This project is an outgrowth of an NIH-funded grant in which we have developed several tools and protocols for proteomic analyses of the non-conventional secretory pathway and enabled the discovery of novel proteins involved in cholesterol transport and cell signaling. Our current goal is to identify further novel proteins that function in regulation of cholesterol and fatty acid synthesis by complexing with SREBP-1. We have successfully identified one of these proteins and are currently characterizing the protein complexes that it forms with SREBP-1.Q: How to import script tag after html tag using vuejs I have an HTML file which contains a script tag. That script tag has to be imported after the main.html. I am trying to do this with Vue but does not seem to work. I am trying to do that with v-cloak as mentioned here. The issue with this is that it hides the script and it does not get loaded.
