separator. 2. Description of the Prior Art The principles of centrifugal separation have been known for some time, see U.S. Pat. No. 4,452,656. The basic structure is a combination of a rotating chamber and a centrifugal separator. The rotating chamber contains an intake opening and an outlet opening. Gases are drawn in through the intake opening and, due to the rotating motion of the rotating chamber, are moved radially outward. A solid contained in the gas is dropped from the rotating chamber to the bottom of the rotating chamber and is collected in a space formed beneath the rotating chamber. The discharged gases are then forced out through the outlet opening. The gases are then heated. This apparatus is extremely energy inefficient and thus it is not commercially feasible to remove carbon from the gases. 1. Technical Field The present invention relates to an electron source and an image display device. 2. Related Art In the related art, there has been known an electron emission device that uses
