The effect of storage at -80 degrees C on the stability of the dithiothreitol in human serum albumin. Serum albumin from normal subjects was extracted by 4 M urea and passed through a Sepharose 4B column. The dye-binding capacity was measured by using dithiothreitol (DTT). The extracted albumin was stable at 37 degrees C for 1-2 weeks and at 4 degrees C for 1 month, but when it was stored at -80 degrees C its binding ability gradually disappeared. The DTT-binding ability was lost after 12 days when stored at -20 degrees C and after 24 days at -80 degrees C. There was no recovery when the stored albumin was thawed at 37 degrees C. The DTT-binding capacity of the extracted albumin was also decreased by heating at 45 degrees C for 1 h, and by exposure to iodide, whereas it was not decreased by the other treatments. We suggest that the process of binding of DTT is mediated by the amine group, which is exposed on the surface of the binding site, in a way very similar to its interaction with the amino groups of lysine residues in proteins. Murine cardiac myofibroblasts express integrin alphaV beta5: adhesion and migration of cardiac myofibroblasts in response to platelet-derived growth factor-BB. Cardiac myofibroblasts (CMs) derived from adult heart are active synthesizers and secretors of extracellular matrix proteins and contribute to cardiac hypertrophy and fibrosis. Our previous studies showed that cells with fibroblast-like appearance coexist with vimentin positive CMs in the myocardium. We now show that all vimentin positive cells in the myocardium are positive for the integrin alphaV beta5, a marker for fibroblasts. In addition, alphaV beta5 becomes upregulated during hypert
