Recommended Posts I noticed the marketplace takes ages to load and refresh, but it is still worth it to buy and play a new game. Not everyone will pay to download a new game (I never did), but if they are bothered enough to wait it out, they will be able to play it for free first. 10 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites Most people are busy with jobs and even school so they won't download and play a game. Some people look for them and buy them. As mentioned, when you buy the game it is available on your PS3 after a couple of days. I'll be downloading Roidmude and finding a store or maybe two. COD2 is worth a try too. I'll play it for free first if I can. 10 Share this post Link to post Share on other sites Most people are busy with jobs and even school so they won't download and play a game. This article is more than 2 years old A former Home Office whistleblower has claimed that immigration judges are receiving pressure from the Home Office to turn a blind eye to asylum seekers who have a legitimate fear of persecution. Andrea Williams, who now works at a pressure group, Liberty, said that she had heard from immigration judges who had "shocked" her with the stories they had been forced to hear by the Home Office. She said the pressure to reduce the number of individuals granted asylum started when Theresa May became home secretary in 2010, and continued under her successor, Amber Rudd. She said: "The judges are out there... trying to do the right thing. But they don't have a backstop from the Home Office. "I know a judge who told me that it's been happening for years, that it has been going on under successive governments, and that the Home Office is a real pain in the neck about it. "They think that if they make a decision
