Travel the world on Ferdinand Magellan's famous voyage to the New World in this new Hidden Expedition: Renaissance Voyages adventure, filled with countless adventures and challenging challenges. This is the first Hidden Expedition game in which players are asked to solve authentic puzzles to help find historical treasures. Place clues in the Encyclopedia Britannica to find out where Ferdinand Magellan's crew hid the artifacts they found on their historic voyage, and search through the entire Mediterranean for the lost city of Atlantis in "The Legacy of Atlantis." Combined use of green fluorescent protein and flourogenic nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide leads to a sensitive and reliable protocol for monitoring induced differentiation of mouse embryonic stem cells into mesoderm. Induced differentiation of mouse embryonic stem (mES) cells is a valuable experimental model of differentiation of mammalian cells and is useful for the study of mammalian development. Here we describe the combined use of green fluorescent protein (GFP) and a fluorescent-nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide (NAD(+)) derivative, 1,N(6)-ethenoadenine (NAD(+)-ethanol). In the present study, we generated two stable strains of GFP-expressing mES cells. Based on the observation that GFP alone could be used to monitor single-cell-level differentiation of mES cells into mesoderm, we then generated two stable NAD(+)-ethanol-expressing mES cell lines. Following the combined use of these two stable lines, we demonstrate here the total mES cell differentiation system. Efficient differentiation of mES cells into mesoderm was indicated by changes in cell morphology, changes in the expression patterns of Pax6 and Brachyury, and changes in the expression of GATA4, Sox17 and Oct3/4, as well as a change in the distribution of intracellular NAD(+). In conclusion, we demonstrate that the combination of fluorescent-NAD(+) and GFP enables easy and reliable monitoring of single-cell-level differentiation into mesoderm. This study should be useful for future studies that require accurate monitoring of cell differentiation into mesoderm in mES cells.
