Q: Do we know for sure there is only one Universe? I am not a physicist but just casually reading some popular physics books and found this in Quantum mechanics and gravity by Gerard 't Hooft "We now know that there is no experiment which can distinguish between the situation where the Universe would have been infinitely old, and the situation where there is a finite age for the Universe, hence a beginning of time. This is the problem of cosmological natural selection." From Wikipedia: "physics is the branch of science that studies the natural world, especially that which exhibits phenomena at the level of atoms, molecules, and solids." My question: Since we don't have only one universe, can we say for sure there is only one universe? A: This is similar to asking, "Do we know for sure there are four elements?". We know there are four elements because there are four materials that exhibit them. And, in the same way, we know there is a universe because there are many phenomena that exhibit it, beginning with the Big Bang and expanding through the matter, and dark energy. Even if we weren't sure that there is only one universe, we'd be very confident that the universe is large and diverse enough to contain many different locations (as shown by the fact that we are in one of them). While it is possible that these locations are all only part of the same larger universe, the vast majority of science (and all of physics) would assume we're in a distinct location in a distinct universe. But, even if that weren't the case, and we were sure there was only one universe, there is no reason to think that it would have to be infinite in age. In fact, the universe may be much younger than even the oldest known stars. A: We don't know for sure there is only one universe. And we don't know that there is only one universe. But we know for sure that there is only one additional improvements to the hardware and software of the system, including a new Jiggly Cogs! In a world where much of humanity is outfitted with Ink Armor, the hidden Sprinkler System serves as the last defense for the human body. Sprinklers operate independently of a person's consciousness in order to save human skin, and can effectively heal or replenish lost Ink! However, as Sprinklers themselves require power to operate, the Ink Population grows more powerful, causing the temperature to rise in the surface layers of the land. As the temperature increases, humans are unable to easily defend themselves. The aerial Ink Battles that erupted in the year 20XX erupted over entire areas of the surface world, and transformed the entire land into a conflict zone. You play as the Squad Captain of the Sprinklers in the so-called "invisible war" for humanity's future, and battle it out using your skills and your team. - Lots of logical mini games and objects.- You will play lots of unique and uncommonly used HO scenes.It took Jim Rogers, one of the most successful and respected investors in the world, to comment on the meltdown of the American Dream. “I think the economy is in the process of a meltdown, and maybe we should be grateful for the Depression, because back then we didn’t have a Depression, we had a Great Depression,” Jim Rogers told an audience in Chile in September. “I think this time, it’s not going to be a Depression, but it’s going to be a Great Depression, or something. And this will be bigger than the Great Depression.” And so a new article by Jim Rogers appears on the Business Insider website. It’s a piece about losing your job and where you might be able to find work. If that’s not appealing to you, here’s the headline: “A different kind of unemployment. It’s coming.” It’s a fantastic article by the great veteran investor. And the thing that strikes me is the sad lack of people caring about this or writing about it in any sort of intelligent fashion. There’s very little on the Internet about the recession and the prospect of a Depression. As I’ve said for years, the collapse of the American Dream will be the story of the 21st century. People want to believe it’s all a problem of government and a lack of regulation. But the story of the 21st century will be that our economy went from working to the American Dream to working less and less. It’s like a person who might be a servant in a rich family, who learns that he will never be the boss. What’s he going to do? It’s not the same. Then someone suggests: “Why not move back home to Mommy and Daddy’s house. I have two kids, they’ll take care of me.” It’s a weak answer. There are some economic philosophies, such as neo-Marxist self-reliance and self-sufficiency, that have convinced some people that they are free of the need for government or the other parts of the society. That we can all fend for ourselves and live the American Dream in the 21st century. It’
