Intro (Julia Michaels) Epilogue (Julia Michaels) Games Teaser Music (Julia Michaels) Jigsaw (Julia Michaels) Valentines Day (Julia Michaels) Special Ending (Julia Michaels)Inhibition of Akt signalling attenuates salicylate-induced hepatic steatosis in mice. Non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) are used to treat and manage a variety of painful conditions. However, certain NSAIDs may induce hepatotoxicity, particularly salicylate, which is often involved in non-alcoholic fatty liver disease. However, the molecular mechanisms underlying hepatic steatosis caused by salicylate remain poorly understood. The present study investigated the effects of the phosphatidylinositol 3-kinase (PI3K) and Akt signalling pathways on salicylate-induced hepatic steatosis in vivo. Male BALB/c mice were administered salicylate (300 mg/kg) or vehicle orally for 4 weeks. The hepatic triglyceride content was determined using a colorimetric assay. The expressions of lipid metabolism-related proteins were determined by immunoblot analysis. Salicylate significantly increased the liver weight and fat content in the mice. Histologically, hepatic steatosis was observed in the mice treated with salicylate. Compared with the control, salicylate significantly induced the phosphorylation of Akt at Ser473 and the protein expression of the peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor-γ coactivator-1α (PGC-1α), glucose transporter-2 (GLUT2) and uncoupling protein-2 (UCP-2) in the liver. The salicylate-induced hepatic steatosis was significantly attenuated in the mice treated with a PI3K inhibitor, wortmannin, and an Akt inhibitor, triciribine. The PI3K inhibitor and Akt inhibitor attenuated salicylate-induced liver weight gain, fat deposition and histological changes in the liver, and the reduction in the phosphorylation of Akt and PGC-1α expression. Furthermore, the PI3K inhibitor and Akt inhibitor attenuated the salicylate-induced elevation in the protein expression of GLUT2, UCP-2 and aP2, and the increase in the expression of acyl-coenzyme A oxid

Human parvovirus B19 (GPa) infection in horses is a serious clinical disease that causes many clinical signs. Infection in horses is characterized by temporary reduction of platelets, a permanent decrease in erythrocytes, and occasionally hemoglobinuria. There is also an important inflammatory response. In experimental studies, horses infected with GPa develop characteristic histopathological changes such as lymphoid depletion, severe necrosis, and the presence of giant forms of infected cells in the bone marrow (BM), bone, spleen, and thymus. The characteristic host response of GPa infection in horses is similar to that of other retroviruses
