-7-335(3). The school board may create criteria to guide the superintendent in making rules and regulations and may make rules and regulations for the proper administration of the program. D.C.Code § 31-2601.2. Here, we do not find a provision in the Code of Baltimore City that specifies criteria for a superintendent to establish. The Rules are clearly a function of the superintendent and are strictly a matter of policy. [3] GSA argues that the Rules are arbitrary and capricious because they require an intervention team to demonstrate the psychological causes of behavior problems to the child's parents and that the mediator cannot make critical decisions for the parent and child in the program. These challenges go to the substance of the Rules rather than their form. [4] We recognize that the "due process clause does not require a particular procedure." White v. Wilson, 395 So.2d 1159, 1162 (Fla.App.1981), citing Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 70 S.Ct. 652, 94 L.Ed. 865 (1950). The procedural rights of notice and a hearing are separate and distinct and due process does not require one. White, supra, 395 So.2d at 1162. [5] Arguably, the Plan is procedural and does not require a hearing, because it is designed to facilitate informal resolution of complaints. The Plan incorporates the language of the school board resolution. [6] See Humphries v. District of Columbia, 554 A.2d 100 (D.C.1989) (involuntary commitment for competency examination required hearing); In re Baker, 424 A.2d 1 (D.C.1980) (involuntary commitment for competency examination required hearing); In re White, 395 A.2d 1097 (D.C.1978) (involuntary commitment for conduct disorder evaluation requires hearing); In re Baxter, 366 A.2d 179 (D.C.1976) (involuntary commitment for dangerousness evaluation requires hearing); In re Anderson, 164 A.2d 628 (D.C.1960) (involuntary commitment for minor substance abuse evaluation requires hearing); In re Bear, 429 A.2d 913 (D.C.1981) (involuntary commitment for mentally retarded person requires hearing); In re Turner, 158 A.2d 209

Crisis lines are phone lines set up by law enforcement and fire departments to provide a 24-hour hotline where civilians can report situations in which they need help from police. In many cities, people usually call 911 for a police emergency, but in smaller jurisdictions, people can call those lines for other issues. But more than half of the U.S. population don't own landline phones. Now, emergency lines in several districts are starting to experiment with the use of Alexa devices to allow more people to call them instead of having to say the number out loud or get a mobile device out of a closet. The experiment is showing promise: We visited one department's voice call center and the emergency call center that receives calls, both in San Antonio. In the station in Texas' capital city, the line was busy with a mixture of people calling 911 to report emergencies and people talking to Alexa, apparently making emergency calls. The device worked with Alexa only in the voice call center, where we could hear police officers fielding calls. The Alexa voice call center only operates while the police station is open, so its availability will depend on the city's labor schedules. But in San Antonio, the use of Alexa was very positive. After a person asking for help reached the call center and was connected to a police dispatcher, the person's location was shared and a police vehicle was dispatched to the location. In short, San Antonio is looking into using the Alexa voice command system in its emergency call centers. And other jurisdictions may well follow. Conventional wisdom says emergency call centers should be designed to be simple, so emergency personnel can get on the case as quickly as possible to take care of any issues. But a system that requires police officers to have to answer a wide variety of questions and then check multiple documents and reports to be able to give a good response to the caller might be a daunting task. Alexa can bring a lot of help, whether it's coming on the scene for a tornado warning or helping a police dispatcher locate and care for a caller. As a police officer in San Antonio, Detective Javier Ortiz said that the average length of a police response to a 911 call is about 25 minutes, which can seem like a long time if you're depending on the police response. "We usually talk to the victim to see what happened, what's going on, if there's any witnesses around."
