Conclusion ===== With this study, we have shown that it is possible to use GC-MS as a tool for the investigation of the antimicrobial activity of *P. frutescens* against *E. coli*. Our results confirmed the well-established antimicrobial activity of this plant and also underlined the synergistic effect of its extract with standard antibiotics such as ampicillin. However, the use of *P. frutescens* at relatively high concentrations can lead to a risk of toxic effects, especially for application on the skin. Therefore, the selection of the right dosage and the type of solvent to obtain an optimal concentration of the plant extract is essential for *P. frutescens* application as an alternative therapy. We thank the Internal Research Funding of Saint Joseph Hospital and Ospedale della Città di Torino for funding this study. Disclosure of interest ===== None declared.
