Used on the job site, retail stores, and restaurants, POS machines track sales, inventory and report to the accountant. POS systems are typically built for cashiers, restaurateurs, sales clerks and others who want to control their products from retail sales to restaurant sales to computing. The two most popular POS systems are cash registers and POS systems with barcode scanners. POS systems with barcode scanners are also known as checkout systems as shown in FIG. 1. POS systems with barcode scanners are higher end, more flexible, and more expensive. Barcode scanners can be a multi-function device. For example, the Datalogic or NCR manufacturers also make an encoding machine that also has a keyboard and can use the keyboard keys to input items. Text scanners are also often used as a combination of a keyboard and barcode scanner. The Enciso Scanner (Trade Mark) Barcode scanner is an example of a combination scanner. The Enciso Scanner has a keyboard, a barcode reader, and an integral computer. bar code 10 =
