Q: How to make the cache_page middleware more efficient? I am trying to implement a cache system on my own (I am self-learning). With the current implementation, I have to make the application to wait until the cache is ready to be served. Otherwise, some pages times out because of the "Connection refused" exception. My current middleware method looks like this: def cache_page(self, get): path = get.resolver.reverse(get.caller_path) request_method = get.headers.get('X-Requested-With', 'Mozilla/5.0') request_host = get.request_headers.get('Host') client_ip = request_headers.get('X-Forwarded-For') if not request_method == 'GET' and not request_method == 'POST' and \ not request_method == 'PUT': return False if path not in self.cache: # get whatever cache header value is set for path current_header = self.request.META.get('HTTP_CACHE_CONTROL', '') if current_header: self.request.META['HTTP_CACHE_CONTROL'] = current_header self.cache[path] = {'client_ip': client_ip, 'date': time.time()} print('session', path, client_ip, request_method, request_host, 'now') return False res = [] for key, value in self.cache.get(path, {}).items(): res.append({'type': value['client_ip'], 'time': value['date'], 595f342e71
